NEWT GINGRICH

New World Order Lobby Promoting Gingrich

By Michael Collins Piper

*E*ven though there was no evidence of it, the elite media announced that the presidential campaign of former House Speaker Newt Gingrich was picking up steam and gave his ambitions a critical boost. This was no surprise to those who know Gingrich has longstanding ties to powerful circles outside the realm of the grassroots voters.

In 1968, when conservatives were backing Richard Nixon or then-California Gov. Ronald Reagan for the GOP presidential nomination, Gingrich was a Southern campaign coordinator for liberal internationalist Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York.

Although Gingrich now touts himself as a conservative, he remains a fervent New World Order globalist and a longtime advocate of U.S. military adventurism abroad and destructive so-called free trade policies. In fact, it was Gingrich who helped railroad the discredited North American Free Trade Agreement through Congress.

A member of the Rockefeller-financed Council on Foreign Relations, the New York affiliate of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the policy apparatus of the Rothschild banking empire, Gingrich is particularly close to hard-line pro-Israeli forces on American soil.

One of his chief foreign policy advisors is Ilan Berman, editor of the journal of the Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs (JINSA), the U.S.-based operation said by Prof. Edward Hermann of the University of Pennsylvania to be a "virtual agency of the Israeli government."

Best known for its front-line role through its assets in the George W. Bush administration in misdirecting the United States into the debacle in Iraq and now continuing to clamor for war against Iran, JINSA has had several of its key figures — including JINSA's founder, Stephen Bryen, and his close associates Richard Perle and Paul Wolfowitz — investigated by the FBI on suspicion of conducting espionage for Israel.

Gingrich — who has overseen a network of political enterprises that have brought an estimated $100 million into his coffers since he left Congress — has been favored by one donor in particular: Las Vegas gambling tycoon Sheldon Adelson, a devoted supporter of Israel, who once described himself as "the richest Jew in the world." This modern incarnation of crime boss Meyer Lansky bankrolled Gingrich to the tune of at least $6 million.

While in Congress, Gingrich benefited from the activities of his (second) wife, Marianne, then on the payroll of the Israel Export Development Company (IEDCO), promoting the importation of Israeli products into the United States — even as Gingrich used his influence in Congress to advance U.S.-Israeli trade.

IEDCO was the brainchild of Larry Silverstein, the billionaire owner of the World Trade Center towers at the time of the 9-11 tragedy, best known for urging, "pull it"—in reference to the trade center's Building 7, which was deliberately imploded—as 9-11 researchers have documented relentlessly.

Silverstein even admitted to The Wall Street Journal that Gingrich was one of a number in Congress who lobbied to support Silverstein's ventures. This happened at a time when Gingrich's wife was on Silverstein's payroll.

Mrs. Gingrich's IDECO deal was cut in 1994 after she and Newt traveled to Israel at the expense of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, a lobby for Israel.

Although she took home a monthly salary of $2,500, plus "commissions," Mrs. Gingrich refused to disclose the size of those commissions. The sums she received are of the level seen in many bribery scandals.

On Jan. 25, 1985, a front-page story in The Spotlight unmasked Gingrich — then a little-known junior House member and the leader of a clique of Republicans, the Conservative Opportunity Society (COS) — as the driving force behind a scheme to scrap the GOP's historic nationalist stance on foreign policy.

The Spotlight revealed that Gingrich and several other COS members — including then-Rep. Vin Weber (R-Minn.) — had attended a secret meeting with Donald Graham, publisher of The Washington Post, at which Gingrich and the COS agreed to use their influence to push the GOP into the internationalist camp. In return, the Post's power-wielders promised to give Gingrich and his collaborators wide and favorable publicity. Until then, the media had relegated Gingrich and company to backbench status, painted as extremists.

Gingrich told the Post the COS would — and they did — call for sanctions against white-ruled South Africa, a reversal of the traditional conservative stand, a move that helped bring down that government and which resulted in South Africa turning its nuclear arsenal over to Israel — a little-known secret then and now.

Soon — as promised — the Post published a laudatory profile of Gingrich, one of many future puff pieces.

Then, Gingrich's colleague, Weber, authored a Post column openly calling for the GOP to become "America's new internationalist party."

The Spotlight was shouted down by conservatives hoodwinked by the big media into following Gingrich's brand of "leadership." Ultimately, however, the secret Post-Gingrich meeting was confirmed by the Post — but only after Gingrich had reached a position of influence. The Spotlight's "conspiracy theory" — as some called it — proved to be a conspiracy fact.

On Sept. 3, 1995 the Post pointed out that "for the ultra-right, Gingrich is just a tool of the world government plot." The Post said "anyone who glances at The Spotlight . . . knows . . . Gingrich is hardly the leader of their movement; in their eyes, he is [subverting] it."

According to the Post: "Those with a paranoid bent are convinced that the Georgian is in cahoots with President Clinton, the Rockefellers, the Freemasons, the Council on Foreign Relations and the entire eastern establishment to abrogate the Constitution and forge a New World Order under the thumb of Jewish central bankers and the UN."

More than a decade later, that sarcastic assessment of Gingrich stands perhaps more true than ever.
